Curacon is one of the queerest little islands of the Caribbean sea. It lies 60 miles north of Venezuela, is about 60 miles long and 12 or 14 wide, and it has water on the island except by saving rainwater in reservoirs. A number of wells have been bored under the supervision of the Dutch government, to which ft belongs, but each ended in failure.

A curious statement regarding these borings is made by the inhabitants of the island. They say that in each and every case after a certain depth was reached the tools dropped out of sight, indicating that there is no solid foundation to the island. The borings were made in low places and through hills, and in about 30 different places, each with the same ultimate result. A few wells have been dug to a lesser depth and brackish, unpleasant tasting water is obtained from them, fit only for manufacturing purposes,

The approach of the rainy season is always an interesting time there. The water in the reservoir is low at this time, and the natives eagerly await the opportunity to gather a fresh supply. Clothing is never washed there in fresh water, but at all hours of the day the beach is alive with women beating the clothes with clubs on the rocks.

The houses are all built in the Dutch style, and are mostly of stone, with tile roofs. The streets are very narrow, in some places so narrow that it is possible to shake hands with the occupant of a

"To chew gum for five or ten minutes after a med is absolutely beneficial," said i.e., "especially for hasty enters, who do not half masticate their food, because the action of the jaws causes the gastric juices to flow, and that is good. But so few people can use and not abuse it. They got the gum in their mouths and keep at it till they fairly dry up the saliva sup-ply, bring on a headache and get gener-ally norvous. The late H. J. Byron had a horror of functils, but was once prevailed upon to attend that of a fellow Bohemian. After waiting long at the cemetery entrance, he and his companions followed a funeral into the chapel, and when the service was half over, discovered that it was that of a stranger. Their friend's funeral had not come yet.

There is a scarcity of young women in the island, but an overplenty of old and winkled dames. It is said the young women leave home as soon as they are of marriageable age and seek husbands in Caracas, Venezuela, or some other South American city. Yet there are some of the prettiest girls there a traveler ever set eyes upon. They are the daughters of Dutch fathers and Spanish mothers, and the mingling of the two bloods has produced a beautiful race, which is growing quite numerous there.

Three-quarters of the population is of African descent, or mixed African, Spanish, Dutch and Indian. A few Indians, said to be descendants of the Caribs, are still to be found on the island living in huts of straw.

Booth as Bilipester.

One story of Booth's trip to the Sandwich Islands remains with me. He had gone there in 1834 in company with his comrade, Mr. David C. Anderson, en rough to Australia, and they were to play in the Boyal Hawaiian theater. They had hired a native to paste up the bills announcing the performance. This had to be done with a preparation named "pos-pose," made from a vegetable called "tara-tara," which is a favorite food in Honolulu, but the poor man was so lungry that yielding to temptation he inconstinently afe up the paste, and to their surprise no bills appeared. When the reason was ascertained, they feared to trust another native, and it was therefore agreed that as Booth was the younger he should act as billposter, and it came to pass that every night after the per-
